

Aging out of foster care in Delaware

In Delaware, young people age out of foster care at age 18 or upon graduation from high school. They enter the adult world often with an extended history of no stability, little trust in "the system" and people in general and few skills that support them being fully independent.

Having been told where and with whom to live (often experiencing many changes) and what to do with little opportunity to make the decisions, many just want to be free of the system. But then what?

With few resources, they set out into the adult world. But they aren't alone. ILYA, a Social Justice Program at First Unitarian Church of Wilmington is here to help.

How it works

Each November, church members and friends are invited to take a wish list (or items from a wish list) that is submitted by Independent Living Coordinators for their young clients who have aged out of foster care. Purchased items are brought to church and then packaged for delivery to the young recipients.

Often, these gifts are the only holiday gifts the young people will receive. Many times they ask for basic need items to just help them get by. But requests run the gamut... from ukulele to giant teddy bears and everything in between.
